

Conservation work in downtown Beirut

Isabelle Skaf, Conservator, Lebanon

In May 2006, a roman mosaic was lifted on the site known as ‘the Garden of Forgiveness’ in downtown Beirut. The garden located between three mosques and three churches is destined to become a place of contemplation and reflection once construction and landscaping works are completed. The mosaic is one of the few archaeological features destined to be reintegrated on the site which has revealed during excavation tremendous archaeological richness.

Fig. 1: The mosaic during documentation

Fig. 2: The site during construction and landscaping works